Ea Mai ‘Eiwa: Patterns of Practice is a powerful new exhibition featuring the work of Nālani Kanaka‘ole (1946-2026), Sig Zane, and Kūha‘o‘īmaikalani Zane — a Hilo-based family of artists whose creative practices are deeply rooted in hula ‘aiha‘a.

As dedicated members of Hālau o Kekuhi in Keaukaha, Hawai‘i, their work across visual and performing arts is continually charged and sustained by hula. From Nālani Kanaka‘ole’s art direction and choreography to Sig Zane’s photography and textile design, and Kūha‘o‘īmaikalani Zane’s graphic design and immersive installations, each artist channels ‘ike (knowledge) carried through generations.

Bringing together new and existing works alongside botanical specimens and cultural treasures from Bishop Museum's collections, Ea Mai 'Eiwa weaves together themes of migration, community resilience, and environmental stewardship.

Ea Mai 'Eiwa: Patterns of Practice is presented with the generous support of Hawaiian Airlines, First Hawaiian Bank, Matson, Mellon Foundation, Servco Pacific Inc., Min Plastics, OUTRIGGER Resorts & Hotels, and Shibby Stylee.

Ke Kai Pōwehiwehi: The Twilight Zone
Richard T. Mamiya Science Adventure Center

This exhibit in Bishop Museum's Richard T. Mamiya Science Adventure Center showcases the rich biodiversity in our islands' coral reefs, presented as two distinct sections: shallow sunlit reef systems and deeper mesophotic coral reefs.

On the ground level of the Science Adventure Center, the exhibit features the shallow sunlit reef systems that most of us are familiar with, highlighting some of the native corals that make up our reefs in Hawai'i.

The lower, second level of the exhibit highlights the deeper and less familiar mesophotic coral reefs, often referred to as the "twilight zone" of the ocean, where light barely penetrates. Deep sea fish and other mysterious creatures are represented here, giving guests a close-up look into the darker environment being explored by Bishop Museum scientists.

Kaheiheionākeiki is a useful constellation to find direct east and west. The star Mintaka, within the middle of the belt, rises direct east and sets direct west.
